I. Peacebuilding Context and Rationale for PBF support

a) Peacebuilding context: This section summarizes the key findings of the conflict analysis, including the major conflict issues and triggers and capacities for peace, as well as the critical current needs. It should also mention if there are any peacebuilding strategies in place and their focus.

Conflict analysis (problem identification & underlying causes)

Fourteen years since the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in Accra, Liberia has taken significant steps towards peace and stability, and it is now entering a post-security transition phase. On 30 June 2016, the Government took over all the security responsibilities from the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), after which a significant number of military and police personnel were withdrawn from the country. While challenges remain, especially in the run-up to the 2017 elections, overall, the Government has made significant progress towards reforms designed at strengthening the country's security institutions. All of the key security tasks were handed over by UNMIL to the national institutions. In addition, there has been some decentralization of security sector personnel from Monrovia to the counties, and all security agencies have seen their capacity increased through trainings and needed equipment.

Significant progress has been made in professionalizing Liberia’s Security Sector. The Government of Liberia (GoL) adopted the National Security Strategy of the Republic of Liberia (NSSRL) in January 2008 to provide a framework for reforming Liberia’s Security Sector Institutions (SSIs) with the view to ensuring sustainable and coordinated architecture which meets the security needs of the people. Commendable efforts have been taking place to reform the current security architecture complemented by the GoL’s commitment to adopt international and national peace and security, human rights and gender equality policy and legal frameworks such as the Liberia Peace Building Plan, the National Defense Strategy, the National Action Plan for the Implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 1325, the National Gender Policy (NGP), the national Gender-Based Violence Plan of Action (GBV-PoA). The efforts largely contributed to the continued stability of the country and will ensure Liberia’s transition to democracy, peace, security and development.

However, the efforts fall short of achieving their objectives due to persisting challenges such as the absence of comprehensive Disarmament, Demobilization, Reintegration and Rehabilitation (DDRR) of former combatants, land disputes, violent crime including sexual and gender based violence, high level of corruption and weak capacity within the judiciary and the broader security sector as well as chronic poverty characterized by high prevalence of informal or vulnerable forms of work, low human capital, poor physical infrastructure, a small domestic market, and limited access to financial services.6 Ebola exposed existing deficits in the security sector, including limited capability of national security coordination through the National Security Council, and weak professionalism, management capacity, accountability and civilian oversight of the security agencies. Currently, the lack of financial resources is impacting security sector development. Given the precarious economic context, the Government was compelled to cut the budget for the security and law enforcement agencies.

In the 2016/17 budget, funding for investments in the security and justice was reduced to almost zero. The budget of the National Police Service was reduced by 5%. The salary (90%)
– non-salary (10%) balance in the Justice and Security sector hampers the effective delivery of security and justice services. As a result, citizens’ confidence in the security sector remains low, with limited visibility of security personnel especially women across the country. The security sector’s implementation of legal and policy frameworks, including gender-responsive service delivery, has been unacceptably slow requiring robust reforms and strengthening.

These challenges consequently pose major obstacles to an inclusive security sector that can sustain the peace after the full withdrawal of the peacekeeping mission from Liberia. Mainly because one of segments of society that are most affected by the current state of fragility of the security sector is the women. Several assessments conducted recently emphasize the need for gender inclusive security sector reform processes in Liberia. Presently, women are grossly underrepresented in the sector, with an average of 17% across security institutions. Increased attention, resources and political will are required to reach the 30% quota for women in the security sector as stated in Liberia’s National Action Plan on UNSCR 1325, Liberia’s revised National Gender Policy (2017-2022) and the revised 2017 National Security Strategy of the Republic of Liberia. Obstacles to reaching this quota include ongoing and systematic discriminatory practices and women’s confinement to traditional roles.

At present, Liberian security institutions lack the capacity to adequately respond to the differential needs of women, men, girls and boys, by providing adequate and appropriate services and protection from violence and discriminatory practices. SGBV continues to be a major challenge for Liberia with women and girls continuously facing high incidences of sexual and gender based violence, harmful traditional practices, marginalization and economic strangulation. Women are also affected by social inequalities and official figures indicate significant gender disparity in employment opportunities whereby 53% of women as compared to 74% of men are employed in Liberia.7 Indicators also point out that 48% of women as compared to 73% of men are literate while 33% of women and 13% of men aged between 15-49 years have no education.

A critical challenge is the fact that security institutions do not often employ a human rights-based approach to handling sexual and domestic issues, communal land disputes, crime prevention and response, and community policing. For example, at border crossings, women complain of constant harassment and indecent searches by joint security institutions. The availability of accurate data also poses a challenge to Liberia’s ability to adequately address the gaps in ongoing initiatives and programmes. Other obstacles include limited resources to implement gender responsive security sector related policies, weak monitoring, evaluation and oversight mechanisms to track progress on women’s engagement in the security sector, limited incentives to promote the deployment of female officers, weak infrastructure that negatively impacts the justice system in rural areas, as well as limited training and capacity building opportunities.9 Liberia’s legal system has often been characterized as a “dual legal system” because of the coexistence of statutory and traditional legal structures contributing to the limited implementation of Liberia’s gender equality commitments. The lack of coordination of actors involved with gender and SSR issues is also leading to conflicting information, duplication of donor efforts, and wastage of resources. The gender offices in the security institutions and women’s civil society organizations generally lack the capacity to develop large-scale programmes to support females joining the sector.

For Liberia, integrating gender in the security sector reform is not only a national commitment – it is underscored in international and regional normative frameworks including the Convention of the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW 1979), the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action (1995) and United Nations Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) and the seven subsequent resolutions on women, peace and security.\(^\text{10}\) For example, Security Council resolution 2106 (2010) calls for national security sector and justice reform processes which encourages women’s participation. The recent Security Council resolution 2333 (2016) on Liberia also emphasized that persistent barriers to the full implementation of resolution 1325 will only be realized through dedicated commitment to women’s empowerment, participation and human rights and accountability for acts of sexual and gender-based violence.

Bringing state and non-state actors together in a coordinated and gender sensitive dialogue reduces factors for instability and the transnational threats associated with “fragile states,” including transnational organized crime, migration and terrorism. Fortunately, all relevant Liberian security institutions have acknowledged that increasing the participation of women will improve operational effectiveness, enhance relationships with the public and promote a non-discriminatory work environment. Experience from past UN Women programming, corroborated by recent evaluations has shown the effectiveness of linking community-based conflict prevention and mediation mechanisms to formal security institutions. In particular, the Peace Huts have shown to reduce incidents of violence in the community by preventing conflicts from escalating and in some instances acting as an early warning mechanism for police interventions. The most important watchdogging function that the Peace Huts provide for the security and justice institutions is a critical asset in the context of low capacity and reach of the formal security sector in many parts of the country.

b) Mapping of existing peacebuilding activities and gaps: This section summarizes the existing peacebuilding interventions by different actors (government, International Organizations, including the UN system, NGOs, civil society organizations, bilateral donors, etc.) and financial and programmatic ‘gaps’. c) Rationale for this IRF: This section explains the rationale for the PBF intervention, referencing the above context and gaps. How can this project make a peace relevant difference? Why is now the right time? Why is PBF the right mechanism? What catalytic effects are envisaged? If there are other PBF projects in the country or if this IRF submission is being submitted with others, explain their coherence and vision. IRF packages should be accompanied by a joint results framework that clearly states how the individual projects contribute to common outcomes in an integrated fashion. Those submitting IRF packages should use the PRF results framework template for their submission.

The proposed project intervention is in full compliance with the Liberia Peacebuilding Plan which in phase I and phase II identifies three key actions as crucial for stability and maintaining the peace: 1) community engagement in the security sector through well-coordinated civil society partnerships and community policing mechanisms; 2) implementation of the security sector’s legal and policy framework, including the operationalization of internal management and civilian oversight bodies as key steps; and 3) essential recruitment and training to further decentralize the presence of competent justice and security sector personnel across the country, with recruitment focusing on fulfilling established targets for women’s employment in the sector. The Plan recognizes that “restructuring of the security sector is an ever-present challenge” (par. 24) by insufficient financial resources to fulfill the peacebuilding commitments of the GoL.

Currently, Liberia is embarking on an uncertain political moment. At the end of the current administration—the first democratically elected post-war government—coincides with the drawdown of the UN Mission to Liberia (UNMIL). As a result, the new government will inherit all of the UN’s security duties thereafter. However, the current obstacles within the national security sector might jeopardize the progress made to set peace in Liberia, with the urge to continue the support during this critical phase sustain the peace and prevent the relapse of violence. Similarly, there is a need for sustaining the momentum created for gender responsive security sector as evidenced by the adoption of policy and legal frameworks. This project therefore aims to address the immediate gaps and contribute to coordinated interventions to tackle persisting gender equality issues for inclusive and gender responsive security sector reform processes. It will ensure the sustainability of peace and stability in large part of the country building on women-led community structures and catalyze citizens’ trust in security and justice institutions.
Several peace building initiatives have been implemented to enhance the capacity and responsiveness of justice and security sector institutions in Liberia. The Peace Building Fund (PBF) since its establishment has supported joint programs that aim to address the persisting challenges in the security and justice sector. However, the gap assessment of the different initiatives shows that the pertinent gender inequality issues have not been fully addressed through comprehensive policy, legal, institutional and community level interventions with limited evidence to measure their impact. For example, while the Rule of Law Joint Program has factored initiatives on gender justice and security sector reform, it will not be able to sufficiently address all the gender and security sector reform related challenges identified in the context analysis. As a result, this project will provide the requisite funds to complement the efforts while addressing the gender inequality issues in a focused manner.

UNMIL drawdown and subsequently the government’s enhanced security responsibilities will likely be accompanied by heightened expenses for the government while experiencing the drop in international development aid. While security will remain an important priority for many actors and donor governments, at this point in time, the current PBF is the only dedicated source of funding to cover the gaps that result from the overlapping administrations with the political transition and the delays in prioritization and implementation of gender equality commitments in Liberia. The funds under the current project will therefore ensure the sustainability of gender and security sector reform related priorities and would allow timely response to the persisting challenges.

The project also builds on a just ended Quick Impact Project (QIP) implemented by UNMIL and UN Women which established the Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce as an institutionalized mechanism within the ongoing security reform strategy. The capacity building support provided to the gender units using the limited assessed funds and gains that have been made can be sustained by this new project in a more robust manner. In addition, the project will scale up the interventions that were supported in the previous PBF gender related initiatives (Women as Peace Makers and Nation Builders - which partly contributed to strengthening security sector dialogues at national and community levels). These projects showed that one of main avenues to improve relationship and trust between the security and citizens is an institutionalized linkage of the two entities through regular dialogues and feedback.

To this end, this PBF project will continue to build on ongoing women led community mobilization initiatives to work with its existing women’s and men’s networks across Liberia in consolidating the peace dividends. It particularly leverages on the women networks in women in Peace Huts (currently in 25 communities in 13 counties with more than 2,400 members), and men’s networks linked to these peace huts (27 men’s networks with more than 675 members). The UN Women led Peace Hut initiative has proven to be an effective force to mitigate the outbreak of conflict and increase the attention of police and justice actors to specific security threats in the community. The Peace Hut women and their networks have followed cases on violence to ensure appropriate redress from duty holders.

In June 2017, the women in peace huts across Liberia held their first strategic meeting and agreed that they will now be designated as “Peace Hut Women of Liberia.” They further decided to register as Community Based Organization(CBO) with the view to consolidating their priorities, plans and strategies including for raising funds to sustain the interventions they identify through consultations within their membership. The Peace Hut Women of Liberia will be modeled along the Liberia National Rural Women Association structure established in 2008 through support from the Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection with contributions from UN Women and other partners. Anchored on a strong political support, this group has been able to drive the rural women’s agenda by amplifying women’s voices and spearheading community based rural women initiatives that continue to attract technical and financial support from national and international partners. In a similar manner, the Peace Hut Women Liberia will register at the national level as a CBO to be led by a national president and county coordinators for each county where peace huts exist. The national Peace Hut Women Liberia will have a secretariat to coordinate the work of community level Peace Hut Women in the different counties.

The decision to reorganize the peace hut women will facilitate their direct engagement with all stakeholders on the women, peace and security agenda on the basis of interventions that are fully conceptualized by the community women themselves. As a civil society organization, the Peace Hut Women will also take up the responsibility of mobilizing funds including to be able to expand their membership and geographic reach across the country. Additionally, each Peace Hut will adopt an economic empowerment component that will boost livelihood of women and incentivize a large-scale engagement by women in communities through this structure.

A recent national assessment conducted on the women peace huts with support from the PBSO, UN Women and World Bank recommended that development and peace building related interventions around the Peace Hut Women of Liberia will need to focus on building their capacity to become an integrated center for knowledge acquisition and empowerment on key women, peace and security commitments; to develop their long term project priorities and strategies; enhance their skills for leadership and coordination with various stakeholders including government institutions; broker networking opportunities between peace huts and other key stakeholders for greater collaboration as well as support in the documentation and visibility of their contributions. These recommendations clearly pointed out the need for ensuring the sustainability of the peace hut women through catalytic funds to support the above-mentioned priorities linking the Peace Hut Women with the justice and security institutions for structures collaboration and mutual accountability.

More importantly, in the context of insufficient capacity and geographic reach of security services, the Peace Huts will offer an important platform for improving women’s leadership and role in security sector related processes as well as community security and justice response. While the establishment of new Peace Huts will be mainly demand driven, past and current peace building initiatives around the peace huts identified the paramount importance of establishing additional peace huts especially in border counties which are prone to violence exposing women including those engaged in cross border trade to SGBV and other forms of violence. These peace huts are also in most cases located far from the border security institutions, rendering collaboration and dialogue challenging. As a result, Women are also unable to benefit from the services of the security institutions in the counties. On the other hand, in some countries, the limited number of peace huts compared to the size of the populations prevented adequate reach to the beneficiary communities. The project thus prioritizes the establishment of peace huts in four border counties namely Nimba, Lofa, Maryland and Cape Mount communities to complement the current needs for gender responsive security sector. However, a project impact and needs assessment to be conducted in future in consultation with the Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection will further determine the number of Peace Hut Women needed in Liberia.
The proposed project therefore will promote dialogue between the Peace Hut women and security institutions, enhance data collection on women’s vulnerabilities to violence and the response provided by security institutions and ultimately foster trust and confidence among communities and security sector personnel. It will also facilitate linkages and collaboration between the Peace Hut Women and the Palava Huts as a community based peace structures to foster peace, dialogue, national reconciliation and healing through women’s active participation and contribution. The project will also ensure that the revitalized Peace Hut Women structures are firmly anchored in security sector related processes including active engagement in the National Security Sector Taskforce for ownership and sustainability of the project outcomes by the security sector and Peace Hut Women alike.

In addition, this year, a joint GoL and UN initiative led to the establishment of the Gender and Security Sector National (GSS) Taskforce to facilitate dialogue and the development of joint programs aiming to enhance the participation and equal opportunities for men and woman in the security sector institutions. While this is an important milestone, the partnership could not provide dedicated support to enhance the capacity of the taskforce to deliver on its coordination and oversight role for the coherent implementation of the UNSC 1325 as well as gender and security sector reform related policies, legal frameworks and national action plans. The current PBF project catalyses focused support to the implementation of priority actions that will strengthen the capacities of the lead government institutions and other members to actively lead and engage in policy and dialogue processes, program development and implementation as well as facilitate strategic partnerships for gender responsive security sector reform at different levels in Liberia.

II. Objectives of PBF support and proposed implementation

a) Project outcomes, theory of change, activities, targets and sequencing: For each of the outcomes identified above, this section provides an overview, including the following: (i) a clear Outcome Statement; (ii) a ‘Theory of Change’ explaining the underpinning logic and causal link chain for the change this outcome is seeking; (iii) expected content of the support, including the scope and scale of support, target groups, geographical scope, focus of support, envisaged modalities of support/ implementation approach, with a justification for the proposed approach.

b) In preparing this section, teams should refer back to Section 3.4 of the PBF Guidelines on considerations regarding gender equality, including a gender analysis in the assessment and planning. Teams should also consider any Do No Harm issues in selecting specific target groups and geographic areas.

This project will seek to promote gender equality in the security sector and enhance the capacity of the national justice and security institutions to prevent and respond to all forms of violence against women. Additionally, the project will enhance women’s involvement in rolling out decentralized peacebuilding effort such as the early warning structures, the county and district security councils, cross border dialogues etc. as both state and non-state actors. The project will aim at building and sustaining trust between security institutions and communities, by catalyzing women-led peace and security promotion initiatives. The project beneficiaries include women from four security institutions (Liberia National Police, Liberia Immigration Service, Bureau of Corrections and Rehabilitation and Drug Enforcement Agency). In addition, other beneficiaries include women in the peace huts in 6 counties and members of the Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce.

This project is based on the Theory of Change that IF security and justice institutions are capacitated to address the differential needs of women, men, girls and boys and to implement the legal and policy frameworks on gender responsive security sector and IF the capacities of women-led community structures and their coordination within the justice and security sectors are strengthened. Then the security and justice systems actors will contribute more effectively to addressing gender inequalities and promoting and sustaining peace and stability because justice and security institutions will become more gender-responsive, coordinated, decentralized and inclusive. Furthermore, a diverse and inclusive security institutions have been shown to provide better services for individuals and be better able to promote sustainable peace and stability.\(^{11}\)

Not only do women often possess a useful skill set, but in certain contexts where they can take on critical responsibility that would be very challenging for men, their inclusion is operationally imperative. Increasing women’s representation in the security and justice sector increases the effectiveness of service delivery by improving responses to gender-based violence, creating more representative security sector institutions, and increasing citizens’ trust in the sector.\(^{12}\) Furthermore, linking formal security institutions to community-based conflict resolution mechanisms opens new avenues for information sharing, early warning and conflict mitigation.

The project will not only focus on increasing women representation within the security sector, but will also ensure a conducive work environment to enable the promotion and retention of women within the sector. The project’s impact will be measured via changes in attitudes of security sector personnel and citizens (male and female) about the role of women in the community life and security sector workforce, including security sector personnel job satisfaction with assigned responsibilities and their understanding of gender equality as a driver of national security and development. These changes will be measured through a yearly survey instituted through the Gender & Security Sector National Taskforce. Data will be collated quarterly for actions by senior management of security intuitions and advocacy by Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection and Civil Society stakeholders. In addition, it will take into consideration the percentage of women in security sector, coverage and access to services including referral pathway and legal aid, and reduced backlog of sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) cases.

The project aims to strengthen national capacities including the Gender and Security Sector National taskforce members for ownership and sustainability of the project outcomes. An important aspect of the project is the fact that it will strengthen engagement by women led structures such as the peace huts that are embedded in the communities with a potential multiplier effect. The project will strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations and leverage upon their local knowledge to carry out the various capacity building, community outreach, monitoring and documentation related interventions. Lessons learnt from project implementation will be documented and disseminated regularly to catalyse further partnerships to address emerging needs. These actions will contribute to the sustainability of the project beyond the project period.

Outcome 1: Duty bearers are responsive to the differential security needs of women and girls in conformity with the International and National policy and legal frameworks including the Liberia National Action Plan on Women Peace and Security.

Output 1.1: Increased capacity of Government Ministries and Security Institutions for the implementation and reporting of Liberia’s National Action Plan UNSCR1325 and promote gender-responsive security sector reform.

Activity 1.1.1: Provide technical support to the Ministries and Security Institutions to develop and implement relevant policy and legal framework including the women, Peace and security resolution frameworks, including the Liberia Action Plan on UNSCR1325 and related national gender policies.

Interventions include provision of expert support for mapping of existing relevant legal and policy frameworks on gender and security sector reform to inform the development and alignment of priority strategies, workplans and budgets of the ministries and security sector institutions; develop dissemination strategies; develop gender and SSR compendium and toolkit; training of senior leadership and gender focal persons of security institutions on WPS policy frameworks; assist in the development of monitoring tools to track progress on implementation of the frameworks; support evaluation of implementation of the National Action Plan.

Technical expertise support to the development of an assessment of the capacity building needs of the gender advisors, security sector officers and women; train the women and security sector officers; in collaboration with the University of Liberia (UL) develop advanced specialization course on WPS; support the roll out of the gender training manual; conduct training of trainers on gender mainstreaming targeting security sector actors; conduct focused training on project management for the head of gender offices in the security institutions; support advocacy consultative platforms for gender responsive budgeting in the security sector; provide advisory support to the gender offices for the development and implementation of their TORs, work plans and gender policies;

Output 1.2: Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce is equipped with tools and skills to coordinate the implementation of Liberia’s National Action Plan and gender sensitive National Security Sector Strategy.

Activity 1.2.1: Support the full operationalization of Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce through coordination meetings; south-south exchange; support the development of data base tools (online/mobile platform) for effective tracking and reporting of SEA and SGBV in security institutions and facilitate communication and transport for outreach.

Activities include technical and logistical support towards the coordination of the SSN Taskforce meetings; conduct an assessment of the operational capacities to identify current gaps; support the procurement of ICT equipment and transportation services.
Activity 1.2.2: Support key security institutions to design and implement programs to increase the representation of women in the security sector, including in key decision making positions.

Activities include support security institutions to develop a 5-year strategy for achieving the minimum 30% quota for women in security sector; provide coordination support to the Gender and Security Sector taskforce secretariat to coordinate its advocacy and monitoring meetings as well as conduct outreach efforts; support the gender taskforce to identify and lobby for promotion of female candidates to key decision making positions and enrollment in security sector institutions through conferences, petitions, award ceremonies and good offices; support training programs and tutorial courses for female candidates; organize courses on career development and leadership for female security officers and managers; facilitate the establishment of partnerships between task force and security sectors with the Police Academy to ensure the incorporation of gender and security sector related courses in their curriculum;

Outcome 2: Community-based women leaders influence justice and security reform processes especially in border areas and demand accountability at all levels.

The project will strengthen the capacities and skills women groups to effectively engage in national and community level security agendas and structures. It will also foster mutual trust between security and justice sector personnel and women groups, enhance the accountability of the security sector for responding to gender issues and ensure women’s engagement in security sector policy making, early warning, conflict prevention and dispute resolution forums processes.

Output 2.1: Women peace building networks including in border areas have the capacity and skills to lead and meaningfully engage in national security agenda as members of the county, district and community security structures.

Activity 2.1.1: Training for women groups and their networks in eight existing peace huts and four new peace hut in bordering counties in community dialogue, security sector reform, networking, mediation, advocacy techniques and understanding of LNAP on UNSCR 1325.

Activities include provision of logistical support to the construction of the 4 new peace huts; recruitment of facilitators to train women in the peace huts on the key gender equality issues (GBV, land rights, WPS and LNAP etc); facilitate networking and experience sharing among the different women peace huts; provide technical support to the women’s peace hut networks in setting their dialogue agendas; provide technical support to capacitate women in peace huts in conflict mediation, negotiation and advocacy skills

Activity 2.1.2: Support community outreach and awareness on LNAP UNSCR 1325 to enhance women’s leadership and participation in peace and security at the community level.

Activities include recruit a national expert to develop an outreach campaign including community friendly TEC materials, jingles and radio messages; print and disseminate communication materials; support women peace huts to organize awareness raising campaigns (such as open community and cross cultural exchange events)

Activities include brokering/negotiating increased dialogue between the security sector institutions for increased engagement with the women in peace huts; provide expert support at the dialogue platforms through presentations, facilitation and documentation of consultations; development of easy to use templates for use by women in peace huts to monitor and report the implementation of the commitments and provide logistical support for the coordination of dialogue platforms

Activity 2.2.2: Peace Hut and their networks are capacitated and empowered on early warning and reporting of violent occurrence as per local security procedures.

ECOWAS and the Peace Building Office under the Ministry of Internal Affairs have established early warning and response systems in every county. However, there are gaps such as the limited gender data and gender blind response. Activities will thus focus on mapping of early warning mechanisms including the assessment of their strengths, weaknesses and lessons learnt for increased gender responsiveness; provide technical support for the integration of gender responsive indicators in the early warning and response mechanisms/frameworks; facilitate increased networking and dialogue between existing early warning mechanisms and peace huts early warning structures; support the recruitment of experts to develop simplified early warning and response monitoring tools, train and mentor the peace hut women networks.
c) Budget: Provide the envisaged project budget, using the two tables below: (1) activity by activity budget and (2) UN Categories budget. Provide any additional remarks on the scale of the budget and value-for-money, referring to the Value for Money checklist.

III. Management and coordination

a) Project management: This section identifies the oversight structure or mechanism responsible for the effective implementation of the project and for the achievement of expected results. If there are other UN peacebuilding projects or other PBF funded projects, this section should also state how coordination/coherence between them will be ensured. If need be, an organogram can be included to help understand the structures.

Project Management Board. The Project will have a Project Management Board. The Board will include the 3 co-chairs of the gender and security national taskforce: Ministers of Defense, Gender, Children and Social Protection, and Justice. The Country Representatives of the three participating UN Agencies IOM, UNDP and UN Women are will also be members. The Representative of UN Women and The Minister of Justice will be the 2 co-chairs of the Project Management Board. Both of them will also represent the project at the Peacebuilding Fund Steering committee. The board will also include one member from the Implementing organizations, LIFEA, and the Chairlady of National Peace Hut women of Liberia will be a member of the board. UNMIL, because of its pivotal role in the Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce will serve as observer on the board. The Programme Specialist and a member of the Taskforce will both serve as the secretariat for the board.

Project Management Team. The Project Management team will be led by UN Women to support coordination between RUNOs, Government of Liberia inclusive of the Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce Secretariat. UN Women will hire a Program Specialist to coordinate and manage the Project. The Specialist will be tasked with the responsibility of reporting to the Project Board on the implementation of activities, achievement of results, and financial accountability of the project. The Specialist will also coordinate activities between the RUNOs, Taskforce and the Implementing partners ensuring that all the activities are complementary and that implementation and monitoring of the project is in line with the endorsed workplan and M&E framework. Additionally, the Specialist will work closely with the Gender and National Security Sector Taskforce Secretariat providing complementarity where needed. As part of the project management team the other participating UN Agencies, IOM and UNDP will have project staff as focal points for the oversight and implementation of the activities that each agency contributes to. The PMT also includes a focal point from the existing Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce Secretariat, which is hosted at the Ministry of Justice, who will play the coordinating role amongst the national counterparts.

The Secretariat which consist of three technical leads from The Ministry of Justice, Ministry of Defense and Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection will be responsible for operating the data base and rollout activities with the security institutions. The Secretariat will have a Technical Advisor for the duration of the project to ensure that the Secretariat has the full technical capacity on project management. It has been agreed with the Three Government Ministries that the Taskforce Secretariat include an M&E Officer, Finance Officer, Communication Officer, Office Assistant and Driver. As agreed, all staff for the Secretariat will be seconded from the government ministries co-chairing the taskforce as these are already Civil Servants and the project would not have to allocate salaries. UNMIL will be also playing a key role in monitoring and supporting reporting of the overall project implementation during the first year.

Implementation. At the National level, the Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce has a workplan which is feeding into the project. The Taskforce will work with the rest of the RUNOs to ensure the implementation of all of the activities at the national level.

At the decentralized level, RUNOs will work through National Partners to carry out the capacity building exercises and support the rollout activities like outreach, campaigns, etc. RUNO's will also proactively contribute to coordination forums and processes led by the PBF secretariat for sharing project learnings and promoting the results with stakeholders at different levels.
b) Risk management: This section sets out the main risks that may jeopardize project implementation, their likelihood, severity, and risk management, including responsibility for risk management/mitigation. Risks should include those of a political and external nature as well as those of programmatic nature. Use the table below for risk mapping.

c) Monitoring & evaluation: This section sets the M&E arrangements and responsibilities for the project, including the persons who will be responsible for the collection and analysis of data, the kind of means of verification envisaged and the budget being set aside for M&E.

In addition, please use the table annexed to this template (Annex 2) to set out the Results Framework. For additional information on Results Frameworks, see Section 7 of the PBF Guidelines. Please attach a separate M&E Plan using Template 4.IONLY if the project will have an evaluation (please see Section 7 of the Guidelines for information on when an independent evaluation is a requirement).

The project will pay special attention to the efficient use of resources and the relevant orientation for the implementation of activities through monitoring and evaluation system. The objective is to ensure that the expected results are achieved.

The Project will ensure establishment of functional management, monitoring and evaluation mechanisms at all levels with particular attention to: i) efficiency in resource management; ii) the effectiveness of implemented actions and the quality of the annual and final results; (iii) the ability to generate sustainable results and impacts, especially through the implementation of standardized and replicable processes; (iv) ensure annual planning, updating data, periodic reviews, joint field missions, documentation of good practices (v) synergies between the different components of the project, and with other PBF projects/peacebuilding projects funded by other partners.

UN Women as a lead agency will take full responsibility for the coordination of M & E responsibilities to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of the project. RUNOs will work together to prepare, through a participatory process, a common annual joint plan and a M&E plan for the project with a require budget. It will also ensure the coordination of a midterm program team retreat with key project implementing partners to assess progress on implementation and potentially adjust interventions as required. Key monitoring and evaluation actions include:

- Recruit an M&E Officer who will be based in the Task Force Secretariat to support target security sector institutions in designing gender responsive programs as well coordinate monitoring and evaluation related activities in close consultation with the project management team
- Training provided to the task force secretariat and the peace hut secretariat to monitor the implementation of the project activities
- Commission a baseline study through a process of consultation with key actors and desk review of available documentations to identify different factors, actors, risks and needs and determine a baseline data to inform the development of monitoring plan and final evaluation process. This process will also contribute to the refinement of the project indicators and targets
- Develop a project performance monitoring framework and evaluation plan. Some of the monitoring mechanisms include
  - Quarterly project implementation review meetings with partners
  - Quarterly joint monitoring field visits.
  - Carry out spot checks on selected project sites
  - Review quarterly project reports of the gender offices to the Gender and Security Sector National Taskforce, activity reports filled out by event organizers, with data disaggregated by age, sex and targeted community, records of the IEC materials and radio messages produced, gender policies, minutes of meetings, SOPs, records of HR processes of the institutions and the records of Security Sector structures and Peace Huts Women EWER mechanisms
- Conduct an end of project independent evaluation to document lessons learnt to inform future programs and initiatives. The summative evaluation process will determine the extent to which the project outcomes were achieved. The evaluation process will be coordinated by UN Women as a lead agency in recruiting and facilitating the evaluation process. Data sources include stakeholders’ official national reports, monitoring reports, project narrative and financial reports and Gender and Security Sector National Task Force M&E database.

Under the orientation of the PBF Technical Secretariat in Liberia, the lead agency, in close consultation with all UN agencies focal points and UNMIL, will consolidate a periodic technical and financial report in line with PBF guidelines. The annual work plan and report will be approved by the Cross Border Joint Steering Committee before submission to MPTFO and PBSO.

The Peace Building M&E framework of the priority plan, which includes analysis and synthetic tools for measuring the contribution of each individual projects to the project indicators. The peacebuilding outcome monitoring would include some comparative data on areas or communities not supported, so as to better assess the impact of PBF support.
